Wondering how to hang in for the long run? Learn what has worked successfully in movement building, as well as what hasn't. Whether you are an enthusiastic new organizer, a seasoned veteran or just interested, you will want to hear Michael Albert speak about his experiences of the past and visions for the future. A writer and activist and the cofounder of Znet and Z Magazine, Albert has been a leader in the creation of alternative media. Schooled in economics, he has developed "participatory economics," and has a vision to transform global inequality. While chronicling the struggle to end the Vietnam War, social change movements on Boston campuses, and the challenges of creating new, alternative social models, Albert points the way forward for the next generation.

"Michael Albert is an important thinker who takes us beyond radical denunciations and pretentious 'analysis' to a thoughtful, profound meditation on what a good society can be like." – Howard Zinn

"Insights into the exciting history of the past forty years, the popular movements and the institutional structures that have sought to contain and undermine them, their successes and failures, and the prospects for moving on." – Noam Chomsky

"One of the world's premiere utopian thinkers." – Barbara Ehrenreich
